Rancho Santiago District gets $4.37 million to build campus

By Charley Roberts
The Register

SACRAMENTO — A proposed community college in east Orange got the go-ahead for construction Monday from the California Postsecondary Education Commission.

The commission action released $4.37 million in state funds for library books and the first two buildings; the proposed site is at the intersection of Chapman Avenue and Newport Boulevard.

In granting approval, the commissioners accepted assurances from Rancho Santiago Community College District officials that the new campus, as yet unnamed, would not divide students along ethnic and income lines between Santa Ana College and the proposed canyon site.

A report on the plan by commission member J. Pickens said "the community is building a new campus in the old Santa Ana has reacted."

But district officials say steps would be taken to ensure such a division. Using the same library books and faculty for both campuses, scheduling certain classes at the canyon campus to attract lower-income and minority students from the county’s urban core, and programs to "build on campus for classes by the fall of 1985.

Evans, continuing his routine Orange, the groundbreaking ceremony made for "a really exciting day," she marveled that the District officials hope to open the campus for classes by the fall of 1985.

The 2009-2010 academic year was a year of achievement for Santiago Canyon College. SCC students continued to excel in our classrooms and on the sports fields; SCC faculty produced important pieces of scholarship and artistic expression and helped students on their academic and career paths; and construction continued as we finished building the new Science Center. Remarkably, all of that occurred against a backdrop of one of the worst national and state economies of modern times.

It has been ten years since Santiago Canyon College was first accredited as a separate institution. In those ten years of achieving, building, and creating, SCC has grown to become a major force in Orange County higher education. Each year, our annual reports have documented the transformation of the previous 12 months. With this year’s Annual Report, we thought it would be interesting to provide a look back at the past decade, an overview, to celebrate ten years of significant events that have shaped the campus and built a culture of achievement focused on student learning.

As you read this Annual Report, you will see just how far Santiago Canyon College has come in a short time. Although the past ten years have been filled with challenges and triumphs, SCC’s future remains bright.

Orange Canyon breaks ground

by Smith Pine/OCN

“The dream has become a reality,” proclaimed Robert Jensen, newly appointed chancellor of Santa Ana College, as he welcomed about 50 Orange Canyon Campus supporters to groundbreaking ceremonies at the site last week.

Opening classes at the planned facility are scheduled for September 1, 1985, actually, but the ceremony to honor construction of two classroom buildings seemed evidence enough that the campus is finally going to be built, 13 years after the Orange campus idea was first promoted.

Bulldozers roared in the background while Jensen introduced Rancho Santiago Foundation president and vice president, Victor Alleman and Shirley Ralston, respectively, Rancho Santiago Community College District Board of Trustees President Vernon Evans and Mayor of Orange Jim Beam.

The podium was crowded with administrators, faculty, students and community members who had supported the campus. In fact, the major portion of the campus is expected to be provided by the district and the campus will be paid for through property tax revenue. Jensen said it will take 10 years to complete the campus, and the first classes will be offered in 1985-86.

Chancellor Raul Rodriguez, Ph.D., said that the campus will be built on an unnamed area of land where the current campus is located. The new campus will be located near the current campus, and the old campus will be used for other purposes.

Jensen said that the new campus will be built over the next five years, with the first classes offered in 1985-86. The campus will be located near the current campus, and the old campus will be used for other purposes.
