Courses in this category emphasize the connection between human behavior and social, political and economic institutions and promote an understanding of how societies and social subgroups operate. Students will be encouraged to apply critical thinking techniques as they evaluate the way individuals act and have acted in response to their societies. The courses will ensure opportunities for students to develop an understanding of the perspectives and methods of inquiry used in the social and behavioral sciences. This area of emphasis will provide students with lower-division major preparation for many disciplines within the social sciences including Criminal Justice, Economics, Political Science, Psychology, Sociology and History.

Learning Outcome(s)

Upon successful completion of the major requirements for this degree, students will be able to

- Think critically about how individuals are influenced by political economic, cultural and family institutions in various cultural settings
- Experience using social science methods of data collection and analysis in order to draw logical conclusions about individuals and society
